

78th Artillery Clerks' Reunion
And Association Dinner

Royal Artillery Barracks
Larkhill

Friday 15th – Sunday 17th June 2012

Message from the Secretary

Mr Andy Tibble MSM

Welcome once again to Larkhill and the 78th Artillery Clerks' Reunion.

The accommodation remains once again our biggest challenge in Larkhill whilst the rebuild of the new Warrant Officers' & Sergeants' Mess continues. The new Mess is due to open in July 2012, so next years reunion will be in the new Mess. As ever I have done my best to sort everyone out and whilst the accommodation may not be of the standard we would hope for, we at least all have a bed to call our own for the night!

I have one or two small administrative points I would like to pass on.

- Car Parking. Please ensure you have parked your car in a designated Car Park.
- Messing. In a cunning plan to reduce the cost to individuals, all messing will be in the Sgts' Mess, including those staying in the Officers Mess.
- Mess Bills. As previously notified, I will take care of all individual mess bills, so please do not pay any bills personally.
- Smoking. In line with Government and MOD policy, the public rooms in the Sergeants' Mess are NO SMOKING. This means that the smokers amongst us will have to retire to the outside smoking area to fuel your habits.
- Annual General Meeting. The Association Annual General Meeting will take place in the area of the Main Bar on Saturday at 1730 hours. I urge all Association members to attend.
- Photograph. A Reunion Photograph will be taken at 1900 hours, immediately following the AGM. I ask that all of you make an effort to attend. Please wear your miniature medals.
- Reunion Dinner. We shall aim to sit down for Dinner at 1945 hours. There will be a comfort break following the Loyal Toast. The kitchen is aware of any special dietary needs previously notified to myself.
- Accommodation. Can I ask that those of you who are accommodated in either Horne Barracks or Sterling Lines please make your beds down before vacating your rooms on Sunday please. Believe it or not, this helps to keep the costs down!

For those that are still without, the Association Tie will be available from Roy Deal at a cost of £13.00. If you are not yet a proud owner of this "must have" fashion necessity, please come and find either Roy or myself and we will gladly relieve you of your cash.

You will find an outline copy of the programme for the weekend on the centre pages of this booklet.

If you have any questions or there is anything I can help you with, you will, as ever, find me in the Bar.

I hope you all have a good weekend.

Ubique Andy

The Royal Artillery Clerks' Section

Army Order 54 of 1903 authorised the formation of the Artillery Clerks Section. St John Brodrick, at "Our Court of St James's, signed it this 21st day of March 1903, in the 3rd year of our Reign By His Majesty's Command." The Army Order was the notification to the Army of the Royal Warrant that authorised this change. St John Brodrick was Secretary of State for war and was signing "At His Majesty's Command". The establishment of the RA Clerks Section did not, in itself, require a Royal Warrant, but financial provision for the change could only be achieved by an amendment to the Royal Warrant for Pay and Promotion of the Army. The Warrant clearly sets out the rank and pay of members of the Royal Artillery Clerks Section but it provides no information as to where these clerks would be employed nor is there any mention of why it was found necessary to form the Section. Presumably there were clerks employed in the Artillery before April 1903 but not in the form that was created by the Warrant. War Officer File No. 18 / Artillery 3938 might well have held some clues to this question but the file does not seem to have been preserved as a Public Record. However, there were two major changes in the organisation of the artillery in the four years preceding the Royal Warrant, which may have been the reason why the Clerks Section was formed.

Until 1899 there was, in the Royal Artillery, no higher permanent command structure than the battery. Most of the batteries existing today are part of a Regiment, which has a Commanding Officer, an Adjutant, Quartermasters and a Pay Officer with suitable staff in support. Until 1899 each battery was responsible for its own affairs under the Battery Commander and the Battery Captain with a Quartermaster Sergeant and a Pay Sergeant. The Battery Commander corresponded direct with such Departments as the Record Office, the Army Clothing Department, the Deputy Adjutant General RA, the Ordnance Department and the Pay Department on all matters to do with the discipline, pay and promotion of officers and soldiers and the clothing and equipment on charge to the battery. Wherever there were two or more batteries in a particular district Lieutenant Colonels were appointed to oversee the batteries, but these officers had no staff and no authorisation to interfere in those matters where the Battery Commander was authorised to deal with the War Office direct. It has been said that the Lieutenant Colonels could not even expect to take their batteries to firing camps. The Lieutenant Colonels were appointed each year to command practice camps but the batteries which attended might not have included any from their own districts, the batteries being simply ordered to attend a Camp of Instruction commanded by a named Lieutenant Colonel.

In 1899 this all changed. The experiences of the German and French Artillery in the Franco-Prussian war had been studied in detail in the British Service but there were as many views as there were those prepared to comment on these matters.

Furthermore the introduction of quick-firing guns had resulted in a change in the nature of the employment of field artillery and, consequently, the need for revision of drills and deployment. What slowly emerged was that there was a need for a permanent unit of field artillery of two or more batteries commanded by a Lieutenant Colonel and staff in peacetime who would train and organise the unit for war. Eventually a plan was produced to group batteries in a particular area into what were to be called brigade divisions each of three batteries. The brigade division headquarters was quite small, consisting of the Commanding Officer, an Adjutant, an Orderly Officer, a Brigade Sergeant Major (RSM of today) and a handful of batmen and horse-holders. These brigade divisions began to form as the artillery moved off to join the forces in South Africa and, indeed I Brigade Division RFA consisted of the three field batteries then in South Africa. Unfortunately the artillery which fought in the South African War were not long employed in the brigade division scheme and were soon in action as independent batteries, and indeed sections (of two guns), when the war became very mobile. There was, therefore, by 1902 very little experience of the employment of the brigade divisions in operations of war.

The problems of organising the forces which went to South Africa had resulted in the War Office accepting that there had to be a proper command structure in peacetime ready to be deployed in war, and March 1902 a Special Army Order was published setting the organisation of the field army in the United Kingdom into permanent Corps, Divisions and Brigades, each with its establishment of artillery. Commanders and staffs were authorised for the Corps and Divisional artillery and it is at this point that the need for a specialist group of clerks, Artillery Clerks, must have been perceived. In addition there was, of course, a need for such clerks at brigade division and battery level so that specialist clerks would support the whole of the staff work of the artillery in peace and in war.

It is believed, therefore, that the Army Corps Scheme, as it was called, was the reason why the Artillery Clerks Section was formed and the Section can be closely associated with the major reorganisation of 1902 and onwards, the principals of which are still with us today. One might well say that if there had been Artillery Clerks in post in 1902/3 the War Office File on the subject might have been preserved for posterity.
